OLD GOULD'S GREATEST DAY.

THE BLUE AND THE GOLD.

Nature enrolled herself under the Academy colors, on Thursday, the ninth of August, 1900, with her own heavenly blue and her golden sunshine: the rain-swept air and the dust-laid verdure were also at the service of the thousand happy guests who filled Bethel with good cheer upon this day of days—so long anticipated, so eagerly welcomed.

through the drenching rain of the preceding day. The suggestion that we might wish an ark had been provided, instead of the great tent which rose in stately proportions upon the Common, was frowned upon as flippant, as was the suggested possibility that more than the traditional number of basketfuls could be depended upon if the deluge drowned the ap-ready to receive the coming guests—glorified beyond recognition by the clever decorating committee, in its bravery of blue and gold, the Academy colors, in the national colors, and in Nature's greens and flowers.

High above the stage in gold letters upon a blue background was a translation of the passage from the Aeneid inscribed upon the beautiful bronze Warwick vase which was given Dr. Nathaniel T. True by his pupils at the Reunion of 1884. The original inscription is as follows: "Forsan et haec olim meminisse iurabit." The translation for this day of 1900 was: "Sometimes, perhaps, it may please you to remember these things." Below, on right and left, were the significant dates 1836—1900. Upon the left of the stage against a background of Maine's famous pines, stood a flower and vine bedecked easel bearing a portrait of Dr. True, strikingly like him as he looked before illness laid him low. The Warwick vase upon a tall ebony pedestal occupied the right, and the front of the stage held a white pedestal with its shaft draped by a pale blue scarf, and holding a basket of yellow flowers, thus symbolizing Gould's Academy.

In this most attractive reception room, the guests were received by the wives of the trustees, having been met at the station by a reception committee of the trustees and escorted to the hall by the Second Regiment Band of Lewistown which was in attendance during the day and evening. But it was towards the Academy that all soon turned, and the Campus soon presented a most attractive sight as we watched the meetings and greetings and looked at the quantities of pretty girls, whose summer costumes added the touch of color for which all eyes are grateful on such occasions.

The front of the Academy was while the handsome class banners of the school most effectively draped the walls.

The crowd surged in and out; old pupils found one another and then immediately lost themselves in personal reminiscences. There was the sound of laughter, of happy voices and general good cheer.

At twelve, the Academy bell clanged forth its own peculiar message to each pupil below, and a procession was quickly brought into line. And such a procession! As the first guests entered the tent, which was placed at the extreme southern end of the Common, the last pupils were leaving the Academy yard!

First came the band, then Maj. G. A. Hastings as marshal. Mr. Charles H. Hersey of Keene, N.H., the toastmaster of the day, led the procession with Mrs. Hersey. They were followed by Hon. W. W. Stetson escorting Mrs. Nathaniel True, Capt. and Mrs. R. B. Grover, Brockton, Mass., Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Parris, New York city, Prin. F. E. Hanscom, Dr. and Mrs. M. C. Fernald, Mr. and Mrs. Cullen O. Chapman and Hon. Epoch Foster and wife of Portland, ex-Gov. Sidney Perham, Prof. S. A. Thurlow of Pottsville, Penn., Mrs. G. A. Hastings, Bethel, Me., Mr. G. A. Robertson of Augusta, Hon. A. S. Twitchell of Gorham, N. H., Hon. Wesley K. Woodbury of Pottsville, Penn., Mr. J. D. Meriman of New York city, Rev. Geo. M. Bodge of Dedham, Mass. The trustees and their wives followed with invited guests, and then the classes in the order of the years.

The speakers together with their wives sat at a table at the extreme southern end of the tent, looking down the long vista of beautifully decorated tables. This table was specially adorned with vines, forming festoons upon the white cloth; with bunchberries, goldenrod, and ferns, while in the prise and admiration arose on all sides, as the magnitude of Bethel's hospitality broke upon the guests. Six tables running the length of the 125 ft. of the tent, beautifully decorated and laden with delicious food. Salads, cold meats, pastries, Bethel's famous cake, puddings, pears, peaches, bananas and the highly decorative watermelon. Such an overwhelming abundance! Eight hundred people were bountifully supplied, and when last seen the distracted banquet committee were wondering if they should interview the highways and the hedges and compel people to help dispose of the still laden tables.

of that strong, sturdy manhood, that pure, noble womanhood for which the State of Maine, and especially Oxford County is celebrated the world over; and I am proud and happy to-day, as the official representative of "Old Gould's," and in behalf of this grand old town, to extend to you a cordial and heartfelt greeting. Bethel is proud of her Academy, is proud of the record which its sons and daughters have made and are still making in the world at large, and to-day her doors are open wide to bid you welcome. May the memory of this day, with all its hallowed associations, be an uplifting

FRANK E. HANSCOM, A.M., Principal.

Never in the annals of the town has there been just such an occasion, and there never can be another that can rival this event in executive ability, fertility of invention, and, above and beyond all, in the charming unanimity and harmony of spirit which brought the whole village into the happiest focus of united effort.

The arms of the warm-hearted Alma Mater not only embraced the village, but clasped in cordial welcome her children and her friends from California to Florida, and even drew within the charming circle of her love one of Cuba's loyal sons.

Surely "the good stars met in her horoscope" giving the best of Nature and the best of humanity on this one-never-to-be-forgotten day. The hearts of those present had but one unsatisfied wish—the earnest desire that there should not be one friend of Gould's Academy whose place was not filled, when that great enthusiastic audience met under the canvas roof-tree. For the sake of those who could not be with us in bodily presence—though their hearts were here—we send out the story of the day.

With unflinching courage the energetic committees worked proaching guests. Undauntedly the young decorators, under their leaders, risked their necks on lofty ladders; dislocated their spines, and pounded their thumbs. Housewives, with set lips, turned out miracles of culinary triumphs with but one dominant thought—"Not failure, but low aim is crime." Amateur florists lived up to their aesthetic calling and prepared exquisite decorations with never an audible expression of the fear gnawing at their hearts that their creations might be bedewed with tears of disappointment on the morrow. High courage prevailed. Let what would come, Bethel was on her mettle; the day should be a success!

Many eyes waited upon Thursday's mood, but when that glad, generous-hearted, broad-minded, philanthropic, Gould's Academy Day sun broke through the heavy mists, this whole little mountain world rose into beatific happiness. Never was there a day, from early sunrise till the silvery moonlight added the final glory, in which largeness of intention and fullness of execution in the way of weather, was more perfectly exemplified. Given the weather—Bethel did the rest!

At nine a. m., Odeon Hall stood handsomely decorated, and with the framework of green branches from trees planted by some who were present, and under whose shelter almost all who were present had walked and talked, laughed and wept, in old-time days, with the heavenly blue above and the golden sunshine flecking the grass, one could hardly hope for a more interesting picture.

The decorating committee had expended an immense amount of thought and ingenuity upon the interior. Every available space was filled with something of interest. A constantly shifting group was always before the long list of teachers' names, as each class-member sought his place among the years. Mottoes, clever black-board sketches, portraits draped in class colors, were on all sides, centre stood a most effective arrangement of deep red hollyhocks. One significant touch among those elaborate decorations were tiny pine trees dotted up and down the long lines of tables.

The immense dinner company was seated with wonderful quickness, and an invocation was offered by Prof. M. C. Fernald of Orono, the oldest ex-principal present. His voice must have awakened many a reverent memory in those who, in youth, had heard this revered teacher acknowledging the presence of Almighty God in the schoolroom, and who were thus taught by him to look for Divine direction in life's ways.

Then followed the singing of one verse of Auld Lang Syne, accompanied by the band, and then the banquet! Murmurs of sur-

CAPTAIN R. B. GROVER.

Over a thousand people finally settled themselves to listen and turned their faces to that fascinating end table, where were congregated the sponsors for the intellectual feast.

Principal Frank E. Hanscom, as President of the day, rapped the vast throng into silence and, with that careful modulation of voice and distinct enunciation which make him a living illustration as a model of cultivated speech before his pupils, introduced the toast master with the following words:

The holiest, tenderest word in any language, the word which lies nearest to the human heart, is the word which represents the name of mother. That person who goes through life without the knowledge of a mother's love, without having had kindled in his breast that spark of filial affection, placed there by the Divine Hand, has missed one of the richest, sweetest blessings that can come to mortal man.

To-day, as members of one great family, you have gathered here, from near and far, to do honor to your Alma Mater,—the fostering mother that trained your youthful footsteps in the paths of knowledge. Your presence here shows how warm a corner she has occupied in your hearts during all these years of absence.

I am a firm believer in the New England Academy as a developer influence to each one of you, and may the year, 1900, mark the beginning of a new era in the history of the old Institution so dear to the hearts of us all.

It now becomes my pleasant duty to call upon a former, much-respected and much loved principal of the school to act as toastmaster on this occasion. I am happy to present to you the Hon. Charles H. Hersey of Keene, N. H.

Mr. Hersey more than fulfilled the expectation of the committee who had chosen him to fill this most difficult position, and drew the audience and the speakers into the most sympathetic relations, by his tactful introductions and careful closing of gaps. He spoke in part as follows:

Your committee knew, when they invited me to preside at this banquet, that they were conferring upon me an honor as marked as it is undeserved—an honor which I fully appreciate and for which I am deeply grateful—but they did not know how much pleasure their kind invitation was to bring me. It is a pleasure to me to grasp the hands and look into the faces of old friends, some of whom I have not seen for many years. It is a pleasure to me to see the old town where, as I look backward, I passed some very pleasant years. It is a pleasure to me to come back

BOWSER A REFORMER

THE OLD MAN TURNS HIS ATTENTION TO NUISANCES.

And the Nuisances Likewise Turn Their Attention to Him, With Direful Consequences For the Man Who Would Run This Mundane Sphere.

[Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.]

When Mr. Bowser arose the other morning, there was an uncertain look in his eyes—that is, Mrs. Bowser was not certain whether he was going up street to blow up the butcher or down street to blow up the tailor. He was moody and silent during breakfast, and as he made no move to leave the house after the meal Mrs. Bowser kindly inquired if he wasn't feeling well.

"I'm feeling well enough," he replied, "but I shall remain at home this forenoon. There are several little things I want to look into and straighten out, and one of them is right at the door now."

"Do you mean that fruit peddler?" "That's exactly what I mean. I am going to find out whether a man with an old horse and a wabbly wagon has any legal right to stop in front of my house and shout and yell and shriek and howl and bawl and roar like that. Just listen to him! By the living jingo, but it's no wonder that we've had five deaths on this street within the last two weeks!"

"But you—you won't go and say anything to him?"

"Won't I!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he clapped on his hat and opened the

The old clothes man ran across the street, but no farther, and from his new position he shrieked and shouted and yelled until he had collected a crowd of half a hundred people and Mr. Bowser had been forced into the house.

"You see you can't do anything," said Mrs. Bowser.
"But I will do something!" he hotly replied. "Are all the ordinances of this city made for the benefit of such howling demons as that? Has a taxpayer and property owner no rights? If there are no laws to protect me, then I'll protect myself!"

Out he went again, and he was just in time to encounter a man who had turned in from Fourth street yelling: "Knives to grind-o! Knives to grind-o! Bring out your knives to grind-o!"

Mr. Bowser walked down to the gate. He looked like a dangerous man, but the knife grinder was willing to take chances if he could make a nickel. He halted his grinder on wheels and uttered his yell of "Grind-o!" as if Mr. Bowser was 40 rods away. He was still hanging on to the "o" when he was seized and banged against the fence, and a voice rang in his ears: "You infernal nuisance, shut up, or I'll break your neck!"

The grinder shut up. He looked into Mr. Bowser's eyes and became afraid. However, as he was released after a minute and told to move on his courage returned, and he hadn't got more than ten feet away before he turned and said:

"You knocka me and banga me, and I takka de law on you!"

Mrs. Bowser opened the door and door and hustled down the steps, while the family cat and Mrs. Bowser looked after him.

"Strawberries! Cucumbers! Bananas!" yelled the peddler at the top of his voice and with a wave of his hand and a nod of his head toward every house on the block.

"Look here, you howling idiot," began Mr. Bowser as he walked up to him, "I want to know who gave you the legal right to murder folks with your voice?"

"Dye mean my shoutin'?" asked the man in considerable astonishment.

"Of course I do! I want to know if the law gives you the right to whoop and yell and bellow and shriek and groan in order to call attention to the hog feed in your wagon. If it does, I'll see that it's changed. If it doesn't, I want you to quit."

"Say, old man," replied the peddler, with a leer, "you must have fell out of bed this mornin'. I've been sellin' vegetables for five years, and you are the first person I've met who wasn't charmed with my voice. Better tie a wet towel around your head and go to bed ag'in!"

"Don't give me any impudence!" shouted Mr. Bowser. "You may be licensed to cart vegetables and fruits around, but are you licensed to set a thousand people's nerves on edge by your blasted howling?"

"I'm licensed to do anything I want to, old kicker," replied the man, "and if you want to raise a row about it come on. You look one of the sort 'who'd take the bread out of a poor man's mouth, but if you try it on me I'll make you sorry!"

A crowd of children and pedestrians began to gather, and, realizing that he would have the worst of it, Mr. Bowser walked into the house. The peddler yelled "Cucumbers!" after him, and the children applauded, and Mrs. Bowser said:

"Don't you see you can't do anything with such men as that? They are coming along here from daylight till dark, and every one yells just like this man."

"But it's against the law, and I know it is!" shouted Mr. Bowser as he struck the wall with his fist.

"Well, there's lots of things against the law, but you can't change 'em. If the police permit these peddlers to yell and scream, they won't stop their noise for anything you say."

"Then I'll break some one's neck!" "Mr. Bowser went out and sat down on the front steps. The fruit peddler grinned at him and moved on, but it was scarcely a minute before an old clothes man turned the corner and set up his yell. He had yelled about 16 times before he reached the Bowsers' gate, and there he stopped and looked at the man on the steps and screamed out in agonized tones:

"Old clo! Old clo! Cash for old clo!"

"Move on, you scoundrel!" shouted Mr. Bowser as he rose up.

"Old clo! Old clo! I buy old clo for cash!"

"By the beard of Plato, but I'll have your life if you don't move on!" exclaimed Bowser as he clattered down the steps, with a tragedy in either eye.

tried to argue the matter with Mr. Bowser, but he declared he'd wet his hands in the lifeblood of the next nuisance who came along. He didn't have over ten minutes to wait. A junk dealer, an umbrella mender, a tinker and a popcorn man suddenly appeared in company, and all were yelling to drown the notes of the band.

"Old junk! Umbrellas 't mend! Fix your pans! Fresh popcorn!" shouted the four at him as they waved their arms about.

Mrs. Bowser threw up the window to call out, but she was too late. Mr.

BOWSER AND THE PEDDLER.

Bowser had sailed in. He upset junk cart and junk dealer, he overturned popcorn cart and popcorn dealer, he filled the air with old umbrellas and tinker tools, and it was Spion Kop over again, with Mr. Bowser in place of the Boers. He met the enemy, and they were his, and in five minutes he was in possession of the field of battle. He was cheered by the crowd which gathered, and a dozen overenthusiastic taxpayers insisted on a speech. A man had arisen who had taken up the cudgel for reform, and they wanted to know his policy toward firecrackers, baseball and kites flying. Mr. Bowser backed up against the gate and might have given them an outline, but before he could collect his oratory a fat policeman burst through the crowd and seized him and said:

"You old ruffian! But you want to get up a riot and disturb half the town, do you? Come along with me!"

Mr. Bowser was walked to the police court and left in the "pen" till the judge was ready to hear his case and say:

"You may be a citizen and a taxpayer and a reformist, but you have no right to break loose and take the law into your own hands. I fine you $20, sir, and if you are brought here before me again on the same charge I shall feel it my duty to put you where you can do no more harm for the next six months!"

"Didn't I tell you how it would end?" asked Mrs. Bowser when he got home. But he said no word in reply. He realized that if he even opened his mouth he would drop dead.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Rugs For the Dining Room—A New Device For Cleaning Knives—What to Have For Luncheon.

Every dining room should have its rug. The quality of this rug must, however, vary with the purchasing power of the individual. Two things ought to be remembered: The rug must not be so thin that it rolls up with every chair that is drawn across it nor so thick that no chair can be drawn at all. The rug may be laid over a bare floor, a carpet, a filling or a matting. Rugs made of pieces of carpeting, with a border, are never possible in really beautiful dining rooms and are only to be considered when questions of economy have to enter in. It must not be understood by this that these rugs are in bad taste, but simply that they are a confession of weakness, as it were, of the necessity of using something which a salesman sometimes tells you, "though cheaper, is exactly as good as the other." Rugs of every kind are manufactured today.

The housekeeper has only to take the dimensions of her room, state what price she can afford to pay and then choose the best that comes within the range. Rugs ought always to be lower in color than the rest of the room or they seem to jump up at you and make a most unpleasant effect.

Knife Cleaner.
The devices introduced to supersede the old fashioned application of ashes and water, with a liberal amount of elbow grease, for the cleaning of knives have assumed many novel forms. One recent device consists of two parts—a knife handle holder in which the handle is grasped between two rubber lined jaws, provision being made for handles of different sizes, as, for instance, table and dessert knives and carvers, and a cleaning device resembling two razor strips hinged together at the ends. These cleaners consist of pads mounted on wood and covered with canvas. In operation some emery or other polishing powder is applied to the cleaner, which is then closed and pulled backward and forward over the blade. The knife holder, it should be added, is rigidly attached to the table or shelf.

What to Have For Luncheon.
It is one of the easiest things in the world to decide what to have for luncheon in warm weather as well as in cold. For one thing, says The Housekeeper, it doesn't so much matter what is served at that meal when the men of the family are away. For another thing, there are more appetizing luncheon dishes within easy reach than there are desirable dishes for the more difficult dinner or the most difficult breakfast. That first meal of the day is a veritable stumbling block of doubt in the housekeeper's mind. One must eat in spite of the fact that most things seem too heavy for the morning meal these days. The healthiest persons, the fact remains, are they who scorn the solace of a mere roll and a cup of coffee and demand a reasonably hearty meal upon which to begin the day. Advice about what to serve should properly begin with that not to serve. Avoid heavy meats, such as beefsteak and fried ham, for the breakfast table with the utmost care, and so far your breakfast will be a success.

The "Little Yellow Doctor."
It is at this season that the "little yellow doctor," as the head of a large sanitarium aptly dubs the lemon, finds abundant appreciation by young and old alike. No summer drink is more wholesome or refreshing than plain lemonade made of the pure juice of the fruit and served ice cold to the accompaniment of the clink of ice against the glass. An old Virginia cook whose lemonade was pronounced perfection always allowed a tablespoonful of sugar and a cupful of boiling water to the juice of each lemon. A few bits of the yellow yellow rind were usually stepped in just water enough to cover and added to the big pitcher which held the cooling drink. Sometimes, yielding to the prayers of the children, pink lemonade showed its color in the glass, a result obtained by adding a little currant or raspberry juice.

An Ingenious Arrangement.
An ingenious arrangement of peacock feathers has been applied lately to a piano back screen. The ends of the feathers are cut off and lapped over one another, so as to represent the plumage of the bird's breast. All the greens are cut away, and the bronze colored parts of the feathers only are left, so that a rich iridescent effect is produced. The feathers are sewed on a soft stuff material, so as not to lie too flat and even. With the green parts of the feathers one or two butterflies are made and fastened loosely on the bronze ground. The bottom fringe is made of the long thin parts of the feather, near its root, and are fastened on the screen as an ordinary silk fringe.

To Remove Wine Stains.
When wine of any sort is spilled on a tablecloth or napkin, it can be prevented from staining by covering the part immediately with salt. The chlorine contained in the salt acts as a bleaching powder.

The Joy of Letting Things Alone.

The joy of letting things alone is not widely appreciated by human beings. They want to put their impress on other beings, and, indeed, to "humanize" Nature in her every aspect. The interference is bad enough when we waste our woods, fowl our rivers and spoil our scenery, but it is most lamentable when it takes the form of a love for bloodshed. Hunting is held as one of the manliest and most improving of exercises and recreations. So well-grounded is the faith in man's right to slay what, when and where he will, that laws for the preservation of our animals—we still say "our" animals, though they will none of us—are a matter almost of our own generation.

It is maintained that we have a right to kill such animals as we need for food. Are one-tenth of those who fall under the bullet of the gunner needed for that purpose? Of the millions of song birds that have been tumbled from the trees, in the last few years, fluttering, bleeding, broken upon the earth, was a single one killed for the satisfaction of a human appetite? Not one. Of the beaver, mink, otter, marmot and other little creatures that have been swept away by thousands, were any eaten? Surely not. And when game is killed for food, is temperance exercised by the butchers? Seldom. Most of us have seen in sporting papers and magazines photographic pictures of men standing proudly beside the carcasses of as many as twenty deer, killed in a single hunt, or inflating themselves over a dozen buffalo, such as used to roam the plains by millions, but which in recent estimates number only four hundred in all America. We have seen pictures representing these men smiling upon baskets and bunches of rabbits and birds—more victims than a family could eat in a month.

Even among the animals that work for us, that live with us, how seldom is any other care exhibited than is necessary for the continuing of that work! We kick our dogs, we beat our horses, we put our cattle, sheep and poultry into draughty, leaky barns and sheds; we turn our cats out of doors. We look on them as being apart, born without rights, born without feeling, born without the loves we feel for mates and offspring—hence, to be used despitefully. It is all because of that old, false belief that the earth was made for man. It was made for every creature upon it; it was made for the trees and grass that take happiness in the air and light. If it were for us alone it would be a sad world indeed, to judge from the way we can misuse it.

These small people are like ourselves in body and brain and way of life. If we have evolved to a higher form and more command, are we too selfish to share our advantages, too indifferent to help those others that we say have fallen behind in the race of life? If so, we have not reached the end of our evolution, for there is still a base and cruel strain that needs to be refined away.

—CHARLES M. SKINNER.

Cow Comfort.
The man who at this season of the year provides some kind of shelter from the sun for his cows is going to receive a big interest on his investment, says Hoard's Dairyman. A cow to return a profit from the feed she consumes must be comfortable, and comfort is not found where the animal is required to stand under a blazing sun or huddle for a few mouthfuls of dried grass over a drought-stricken acre pasture. Butter is a slippery article, and it slips away easily and quickly when its factory is required to spend three-fourths of the time fighting flies. A cow will appreciate shelter on a hot day as much as, if not more than, a man. Cool water and a corner sheltered from the sun, together with a breeze to keep the flies away, will go far toward filling the milk pail with heat, flies, poor water and dried up pasture will produce the opposite. Costly shelter is not necessary, but some old boards and straw, together with a few hours' work, will go far in producing cow comfort.

OVARIAN TROUBLES.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cures Them—Two Letters From Women.
"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I write to tell you of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me. I was sick in bed about five weeks. The right side of my abdomen pained me and was so swollen and sore that I could not walk. The doctor told my husband I would have to undergo an operation. This I refused to do until I had given your medicine a trial. Before I had taken one bottle the swelling began to disappear. I continued to use your medicine until the swelling was entirely gone. When the doctor came he was very much surprised to find me so much better."—MRS. MARY SMITH, Arlington, Iowa.
"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I was sick for two years with falling of the womb, and inflammation of the ovaries and bladder. I was bloated very badly. My left limb would swell so I could not step on my foot. I had such bearing down pains I could not straighten up or walk across the room and such shooting pains would go through me that I thought I could not stand it. My mother got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told me to try it. I took six bottles and now, thanks to your wonderful medicine, I am a well woman."—MRS. ELSIE BRYAN, Otisville, Mich.

Hillside Comforts.
Half hidden by the pines and young oaks on what has been known for years as the "Baker pasture" has recently sprung up a most comfortable summer house, having "all the comforts of home," with the telephone, spring water, balsamic virtues from the wood, etc. It was built by Dr. J. C. Gallison to afford him rest and quiet from the problems and noises of the town, where he could rest and recreate, doffing the cares and thoughts of recent experiences in the Great General Court, to say nothing of the less exciting episodes connected with the selectman's council chamber.

The house is pleasantly situated with a refreshing, southern outlook, with broad frontage to the road, left purposely by its owner in its natural state, lest art destroy the rough simplicity of nature. The house combines an architectural conglomerate, with its broad Italian chimney, its pleasant Swiss chalet veranda, its thoroughly Yankee interior with strict regard to the utilization of space and the conveniences of summer life. A broad fireplace in which hangs an ancient swinging crane, with iron tongs, shovel, etc., and a pair of bellows which had the honor to belong to the grandmother of the illustrious Horace Mann, takes one back to colonial days, while the kero-sene three burner upon which the daily meals are cooked, is thoroughly "up to date." Sleeping rooms abound, that is, there is a bed anywhere and everywhere, on the veranda, under the eaves, and in the alcoves.

The exterior is boarded and then clapboarded with pine and chestnut slabs, from which the bark has not been removed, giving the house a distinctively rustic appearance. Wire and mosquito netting protect the inmates from unwelcome intruders, and make the verandas and rooms comfortably habitable at all times. The Italian chimney, built both by Italians and upon Italian lines, is decidedly artistic, though somewhat hidden from view, being upon the north side of the house. At the gate stands two immense posts, twelve feet high, of cobble, and broken stone, the words "Villa Gallison" appearing upon them.

The doctor and his family spend their nights there, and he is pleased to find that the place has the flavor of sylvan life with the conveniences of town life, so that each day it is easy for him to pick up the thread of professional and civic duties without loss of time. It is already proving a panacea for some of the difficulties with which the doctor has been wrestling. Therefore it is a success.—Franklin, Mass. Sentinel.

Sufferers From Kidney Trouble Cured This Year by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy Sample Bottle Free.

Thousands who have written for one of the free trial bottles of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy have literally had their lives saved by a postal card. They got the trial bottle, and it proved to them that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was the only real cure for diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Bladder and Blood, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Chronic Constipation and the sicknesses peculiar to women. They bought a large sized bottle of their druggists and it benefited or cured them (the above is not an idle statement, but the result of careful investigation). You can do the same thing. If you are in doubt as to whether you have trouble with your Kidneys or Bladder, put some of your urine in a glass tumbler and let it stand 24 hours; if it has a sediment, or a milky, cloudy appearance, if it is ropy or stringy, pale or discolored, you should lose no time in taking Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy; it can be had of all druggists at $1.00 a large bottle, or six bottles for $5.00. It is without question the surest medicine of the age to put a stop to such dangerous symptoms as pain in the back, a frequent desire to urinate, especially at night, scalding burning pain in passing water, inability to hold urine and all the unpleasant and dangerous effects produced on the system by the use of whiskey and beer.

Send your full name and address to the Dr. David Kennedy Corporation, Rondout, N. Y., and be sure to mention this paper with a trial bottle, with pamphlet of valuable medical advice, will be mailed to you absolutely free. The publishers of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this liberal offer.

Aeration and Cooling.
Makers of milk who have not yet learned the value of aeration and cooling are lacking in fundamental education for their calling, says The Breeder's Gazette. Cleanliness, aeration and cooling will do much to preserve milk pure and sweet during the hot weather approaching and do away with the temptation to use preservatives. Creamerymen are especially interested in spreading the knowledge of the benefits to be derived from the use of the simple cooling apparatuses on the market, as the success of their summer output depends on the condition of the milk when delivered to them.

Broken Bricks-a-Brace.

Mr. Major, the famous engineer, says, of New York, "I have seen some very interesting facts about Major's Cement."
The multi-tonnage of this standard article know that it is many hundred per cent. better than other cements for which similar claims are made, but a great many do not know why. The simple reason is that Mr. Major's cement is made of the best materials ever discovered and other manufacturers do not use them because they are too expensive and do not allow large profits. Mr. Major's cement is made of the elements of cement costs $3.75 per pound and another costs $2.50 a gallon, while a large share of the market are nothing more than liquid upon the so-called cements and liquid upon the cement dissolved in water or citric acid, and in some cases altered slightly in color and odor by the addition of cheap and useless materials. Major's cement retails at fifteen cents and tries to sell a substitute you can depend upon. It is that his only object is to make large profits. The profits on Major's cement is as much as any dealer ought to make on any cement. And this is doubly true in view of the fact that each dealer gets his share of the benefit of Mr. Major's advertising, which now amounts to over $5000 a month, throughout the country. Established in 1871.

Insist on having Major's. Don't accept any off-hand advice from a druggist. If you are at all handy and you will be likely to find that you are a good deal more so than you imagine, you can repair your rubber boots and family shoes, and any other rubber or leather articles with Major's Rubber Cement and Major's Leather Cement. And you will be surprised at how many dollars a year you will thus save. If your druggist can't supply you, it will be forwarded by mail; either kind. Free of postage. July 1st

All roads led to the city of Portland, last week.

Are you interested in a fund for Gould's Academy?

Good bye, old friends, we hope to see you at our next reunion.

If Thursday, that ideal Bethel day, sandwiched in between a drenching rain and a drizzly dog day, wasn't made for Gould's Academy, what was it made for?

Would you not like to know how that Gould's Academy Fund comes out? If so, keep in touch with the columns of the News, and they will tell you.

Many of Bethel's sons and daughters, who came home to attend the Reunion, left their subscriptions to the Bethel News, that henceforth, they may hear from home once each week. Did you?

"Old Home Week" has been an unqualified success, and thousands of people from all over our country have visited their old homes during the past week. Thousands of homes have been made glad and thousands of hearts have leaped for joy.

What makes Bethel what it is? Why has Bethel so many loyal sons and daughters? Why has Bethel sent so many young men and young women to college, who, in after years, have gone out into the world and done honor to the old Pine Tree State? Is it not because her educational standard has been high? Is it not because an institution has been maintained within her borders that has fitted these young men and women to enter college? Can you not count scores of such young people who never would have entered college had it not been possible for them to get their preparation at home? If these things be true, and we all admit that they are, do we not owe to that institution all that we are to-day, and all that we hope to be in the future? In the light of these facts, let us not only preserve our beloved Academy, but let us place it upon a foundation that shall be as eternal as the hills which encircle it, and the future of Bethel will not only record the noble deeds of her past children but it shall glitter with the glorious achievements of generations yet to come.

Littlefield, Aug. 21.

Hon. Charles E. Littlefield, representative to Congress from the Second District, will speak in Odeon Hall, Bethel, Tuesday evening, Aug. 21, at 8 o'clock. There had been some question about the date, but Aug. 21 has finally been given to Bethel. An effort will be made to arrange for special transportation over the G. T. R. from Gilead and West Paris, inclusive, and if such arrangement is made the fact can be learned at the different stations.

We desire to give expression to our deep and heartfelt gratitude to all the friends whose sympathy and help have been so full and generous in our bereavement.

Taking the many kind and tender words that have been written and spoken, and the abundance and magnificence of the flowers given, as indicating the esteem in which our dear one was held, we are very much comforted to know that she held such a warm place in so many hearts.

OLD GOULD'S GREATEST DAY.

without the responsibilities of a teacher, and this pleasure is doubled, as I think that you are glad that I come, if at all, in some other capacity.

It is a pleasant thing I do to bring my greeting to the old Academy; seated here among her ancient hills, almost as steadfast as they—in this fair town with its elm-shaded streets, its fair river and its verdant and far stretching meadows—"beautiful for situation, on the sides of the north"—the place of beautiful summer and of New England winter—how many men and women look back to her with affection, and, present or absent, think of her to-day and unite with me in my greeting—and, had I nothing to do, it would be a pleasure to me to join in the ceremonies held in honor of "Old Gould's"—the staunch old foundation which stands as a monument to the love which our forefathers had for education and to their belief in its benefits.

It is often said that our common school system is the corner stone of our institutions and this is true in this that it prepared a people by culture and by knowledge not only to build up these institutions, but to love them and maintain them afterward.

But the academy was an advance from the common school and marks a trait in the New England character of which we have always been proud—that is to say—we were not satisfied to stay where we were. In this, as in everything else, some progress must be made and the New England academy was the direct result. It was the spirit of the New England Oliver Twist demanding more.

Now, you will probably hear about this and much more besides, to-day. I only want to say that if ever education and mental culture were necessary to the American citizen—if ever it was necessary to foster them and the places where they are disseminated—if it was ever necessary and profitable to honor and stand by our places of learning—it is now. By them we have become a great and powerful people, but we have opened our gates to the immigration of other peoples not so advanced or so blessed as we, people, strange to our education and our institutions. They have poured in upon us, have increased and multiplied, mingled with our native population and spread over our great West, until the red blood of the old New England culture has become thin and diluted. There is scarcely enough leaven to leaven the lump.

In the determination of the great questions continually recurring, we cannot depend as confidently as we used upon the cultivated intelligence of the whole people. We have always been accustomed to say that when the American got at a question at the polls, it would be settled rightly. We are not now quite so confident as we used to be. Fallacies in finance and in theories of government have become altogether too widespread and too widely held for absolute comfort.

Now, I did not mean to take your time, but I come back to my original statement that we never more needed the trained intelligence which our schools give our boys and girls—and so it is a pleasure to me to come here and assist at the glorification of Gould's Academy—one of our seats of learning.

Notwithstanding that all these things are very pleasant to me, yet it is with the greatest diffidence that I stand before you. It is more than a quarter of a century since my connection with Gould's Academy. It is difficult for me to realize it, but it is a fact, and, in this re-union of the alumni and alumnae of the Academy, the old students and the old teachers—the later students and teachers are here brought together, and by this time I am one of the old ones, and we are in the minority and decidedly so, and I feel, I imagine, like an Egyptian mummy dug up and revisiting the glimpses of the moon; and belonging to another generation. I hardly know how to speak before you of the present. You look upon us as of the ancients—we scarcely feel ourselves so as yet, and yet, I suppose it is true, the years have crept upon us and gone by us, perhaps unheeded, but they have gone just the same, and there are few of us when we stop to think, but realize the truth and the meaning of the old ballad:

"For Age with stelling step,
Hath clawed me with his clutch,
And lusty Youth away he leaped,
As there had been none such.
My lusties they do me leave,
My fansies all are fled;
And tract of time begins to weave
Gray heaves upon my head."

Lo here the bared skull,
By whose bald sign I know,
That stouping Age away shall pull
What youthful yeres did sow."

You have come from far and near to hear of each other and the Academy,—to tell old tales—not all of them—and review its useful substantial past, to congratulate yourselves upon its prosperous present and to look forward to a still more brilliant and helpful future. It is not for me to prophecy of that future for which, with you, I hope,—to speak of the present in which, with you, I rejoice, or to join in, or add to your pleasant reminiscences which, with you, I shall enjoy. Other arrangements have been made for all this, and I should ill requite your kindness if I should take the time allotted to others, for you did not come here to hear me, yet the minor part assigned to me is not without its importance; for all these pleasant things about to come, you must depend on me. Like Glendower, I shall "call spirits from the vasty deep,"—the spirits of wit and eloquence to instruct and amuse you, for all these gentlemen are full of the day and its object. You informed us in your circular invitation that this banquet was to be followed by "a feast of reason"—it is here and I would have you know that the lad has more than "five barley loaves and two small fishes" and you shall be fed,—and of the fragments the BETHEL NEWS will undoubtedly take up more than twelve basketfuls.

And now comes a hopeless task! How can we ever give the readers of the News an idea of the cleverness of the short speeches that followed, and the effect produced. Some occult power was certainly at work for never was an audience more entranced. For four hours, upon an August day, with the thermometer antagonistic to every starched collar present, those speakers held the absorbed attention of their hearers. The audience itself, on the other hand, must have been an inspiring force, for our best speakers never spoke better, and those less well-known, afterward confessed that the sight of rapt, attentive faces lifted them from the thought prepared, into a fresher vein of feeling, so that, discarding notes, they spoke from the spirit of the hour.

Whether it was Mr. Stetson's eloquent strength or Mr. Chapman's reminiscences of fine characters in fine families; or Judge Foster's well-known "rounded periods" in which he interwove touching personal tributes and convulsively funny stories; or Prof. Thurlow's delightful way of saying things; or Dr. Fernald's strong suggestive train of thought; or Mr. Bodge's merry allusions, with the old-time twinkle in his eye; or Hon. A. S. Twitchell's earnest and tender words; or Gustavus' stentorian revivals of old injuries in the famous U. B. Society; or Mr. Merriman's graceful expressions of interest in the scene of his former labors; or Wesley Woodbury's lovable loyalty in thought, word, and, later on, deed; or even ex-Gov. Perham's modest withdrawal from the list—the audience was "en rapport" with all, and laughed and cried, grew reverent, tender, earnest or mirthful as it was played upon by the magical influence of the orators' voices.

Close beside the toastmaster, sat a man beside his lovely wife, one whose name stands as a synonym for financial success, and better than that for broad-minded, warm-hearted philanthropy. Something unexpectedly good and generous seems to surround him with a mental atmosphere like a halo of light, and hope and courage come with a grasp of his hand. When in the midst of the speeches he introduced an innovation, the whole audience responded to the influence of a strong and generous nature.

He suddenly presented himself in the role of a stock financier, offering for sale blocks of stock in Gould's Academy's future at fifty dollars a year for a term of ten years. Giving the audience time to catch its breath, he gallantly led the van by taking the first block himself. The generous ardor of his words touched hearts and opened purse-strings. The loyal sons and daughters of the institution, proud of her past and eager to ensure a more prosperous and glorious future, enthusiastically rallied to her support. The stock found a ready market, blocks, half-blocks, quarter-blocks, etc., were readily disposed of, and when no more bids for stock were received, and contributions in cash were called for, the gifts came in in hundreds, fifties, twenty-fives, tens, fives and twos,—the last just as valuable a gift to the spirit of the occasion as were the larger sums,—while waves of applause and cheers welcomed each addition.

When Capt. Robbins Grover, for none but "Rob" could have filled this role, gave as the result of his efforts the sum of over $5000 as the nucleus of a fund to ensure a prosperous future for "Old Gould's," the great alumni throng felt their hearts grow strong and brave knowing that other hearts, later on, will feel the pathos of this appeal for help for this noble old Academy, and will recognize this call as from the One who gives His children the privilege of being the instruments by which His will becomes accomplished on earth.

The throng reluctantly received its dismissal, and with "America" ringing in hearts and through voices, dispersed, to meet again at Odeon Hall at eight p. m.

At nine o'clock, Odeon Hall was taxed to its utmost as a reception salon. Maj. Hastings, President of the Board of Trustees, and Mr. Hanscom, the Principal of Gould's Academy, received the guests at the door, and there all formality ended. Never upon a warm August night was there a merrier, happier, more enthusiastic meeting of old friends, and oh! the pretty girls!

Bethel belles are well-known as examples of what the old State can produce in grace and loveliness, and that night there were reinforcements from far and near. There were toilets, too, and all that goes to make up a brilliant and effective reception. There was, withal, a strange sense of kinship. People who are usually reserved, threw open their life histories; told of their successes; their fortunes, their failures, even; talked of their wives, of husbands, and, of course, of their children. In the sudden pauses of music, we caught fragments of conversation:

"Six months old, and two teeth already!"

"Yes, we went west, and oh, how flat it did seem after Bethel!"

"That is my third daughter, the one in pink."

"Lost every cent I'd made, and ten years after was twice as well off."

"Knew me the moment you saw me? So sorry, I'd supposed I was vastly improved."

"Yes, he was our only son; his place in our lives can never be filled."

And the kaleidoscope throng combined and re-combined, all feeling bonds tighten and love deepen as the hours brought us more and more into the old familiar ways of thought, speech, and expression. Hardly a face but held something of its youth in its eyes. "The child is father of the man!"

One guest attracted much attention as he is one of the famous band of Cuban teachers at Harvard, and twenty-two years ago was a student at Old Gould's, as was an elder brother years before. Now he proposes to send his son from Cuba to Bethel to be educated. What if the old educational connection between Bethel and Havana, which was in force in Dr. True's day, should be resumed?

Most gentlemanly, refined, and studious were the young Cuban students of those days. Their memories will be an "open sesame" for the young men they may choose to send among us in the homes where they were loved and are unforgotten.

There was a trace of sadness as the throng drifted away into the moonlight night, never again to reassemble under the same conditions, but the power of a future lies in a little group who, in a corner of the crowded room, under Judge Foster's legal wing, quietly organized an embryo Alumni Association, by electing temporary officers. From this organization we may confidently expect much that will be for the future benefit of the Academy and the town.

The Reunion of 1900 is now a thing of the past, but there are remembrances of the Alumni of Old Gould's to be inaugurated for the future. It is not an extravagance to prophesy that the time will come, when, instead of a once honored building falling into the dilapidation of disuse; instead of a village humiliated by the decay of its educational life; desolated by the loss of its ambitious youth who will seek educational advantages elsewhere; impoverished by the absence of families of wealth and refinement who cannot permanently remain where they cannot educate their children—instead of these conditions, which will surely follow unless the financial needs of the institution are promptly and generously provided for we have it in our united power to realize the reverse of this sad resume, and to make Bethel, truly, "a city set upon a hill" from whose heights the light of higher education, burning clear and bright, will draw towards its borders the aspiring youth of the land. The future of Bethel is identical with the future of Gould's Academy; together they will rise or fall.

The ball is set in motion that will secure an assured future of progress for town and school. Great forces, seen and unseen, will hasten its impetus and add to its magnitude. "Nothing great was ever accomplished without enthusiasm," said our wisest American prophet, and to the cause of saving Gould's Academy, its friends—and it has no enemies—enthusiastically pledge themselves.

The Reunion of 1900 has done its noble work!

A little help from each of the many friends, far and near, will mean far more for the future of the school than if said help all came from one individual. "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull together," and the future of Gould's Academy is secure. Contributions will be acknowledged and the increase in the fund noted in these columns from time to time.

Letters From Absent Friends.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 6, 1900.

FRANK E. HANSCOM, Principal,

Gould's Academy, Bethel, Me.

Dear Sir:—I had laid all my plans to be present at the Reunion of the students of Gould's Academy on the 9th. It would be difficult for me to express to you the pleasure I anticipated at that Reunion, but circumstances beyond my control have prevented me from realizing that great pleasure or revisiting, at this time, the scenes of my boyhood education, and seeing some of my old friends whose image I carry so fondly in my memory. I wanted to sit down at the banquet and hear the story, not only of the old Academy during these years that I have been absent from it, but to hear the story of those who have wrought out much of their life-work, and who were some of them my companions as students in Gould's Academy. I would have been glad to tell much of the story of my own life, and how much I am indebted to Gould's Academy and especially to Dr. N. T. True, his family, and Miss Merrill who was preceptress in the Academy when I was a student. Great, big-hearted, wise Dr. True, who had the largest possible sympathy with boys and girls who were his students and trying to make the best of the gifts which God bestowed upon them. With a mind all-comprehensive in the study of Nature, and a heart that always beat in the right place, I remember his words of encouragement and of wisdom which came into my forming days and made my life certainly full in these later years of blessed memory.

I wanted to come and tell the younger generations what an influence and what a power the life of a great teacher is. I should have certainly alluded to the kindly words which such a teacher as Miss Merrill said to me, and have tried to give to her, if she is living, the tribute due to her as friend and teacher. There is no such a meeting as the reunion of old schoolmates. Verily, the words of Longfellow come true in such reunions, "You cannot buy with gold the old associations." Then, I knew that if I could come to Bethel, at this reunion I should meet men who in their boyhood and girlhood were my pupils. I cannot tell you how great is my disappointment in not being able to come. I long to see their faces, to shake their hands, to have them tell me what they have done, what they are doing, and whether they think life is worth living or not. To me it has always been a luxury to live. I never saw the place where I did not find friends, teachers, wise and considerate companions. There is every reason in the world why I should be present, but it is ordered otherwise. In the great march of business life with which I have been associated, there is a campaign going on which I cannot leave, some of my trusted lieutenants are away, and there is no one to take their place except myself, so I must remain with my hand still on the tiller to see that the ship goes not out of her course.

I wanted to tell you and the students under you, who go in and out by the gate that leads from the Common into the Academy, that I planted the Elm that stands on the left-hand side close by the gate, nearly fifty years ago, and that I brought it out my shoulders from the bordering woods, knowing full well that a tree on the border was more likely to live than one which grew in the forest, when transplanted. I knew another thing, that the elm is a lover of water, a hard drinker, and that where that tree now stands there was almost always a puddle of water standing, so I chose that as the site of my tree, my elm, and every time I have been in Bethel, which is only two or three times since I was a student there, I have gone down under that tree and marked its size and its growth and I have taken great pride in it. I have been planting trees all my life since I planted that elm in the campus of Bethel Academy. If I have done nothing else in life, I have certainly provided fine shade for many a person, and I think it a great privilege as well as a charming duty to plant trees. May I ask you and any of the friends who knew me when I was a boy and a young man, to stop underneath that elm and say "This is the Holden Elm." That would please me. May I ask you to remember me in all kindness to the widow of Dr. True and to his daughters whenever you see them? It has been my good fortune all my life to live in beautiful places. I was born up in Oxford County, I prepared for college at Bethel, as you all know, one of the most charming of all the beautiful towns in New England. I spent two years in Waterville College and the next two of my college life at the University of Michigan, and went thence to Kalamazoo, Michigan, where I was professor in Rhetoric and English Literature, living in one of the most charming towns of all the western country. I came to Cleveland, and here I have made my home on the shores of Lake Erie, and certainly I know no more charming spot in all the earth than that in which I live and call my home. I feel indebted to Dr. True for teaching me to love the beautiful in Nature, to be a student in natural science, and to see the great laws that have made the world so useful and so beautiful. I almost feel as I write this letter to you, and recall the days of my boyhood in Bethel, the lines of Goethe in the introduction to Faust "Give me back my youth, give me back the days when I was forming."

Need I tell you how much I regret that I cannot be present at this Reunion, and so I close with a benediction for all the sons and daughters, teachers and friends of Gould's Academy.

Truly yours,
L. E. HOLDEN.

Cape Elizabeth, Me., Aug. 3, 1900.

MISS ANNIE M. FRYE,

Secy. Reunion Committee,

Gould's Academy.

The invitation to the Reunion and Banquet at Bethel, Aug. 9, which was sent to my address at Newark, N. J., has just reached me here.

I would that I could be present and participate; no one thing in "Old Home Week" appeals to me like this Reunion, as some of the brightest and most cherished memories and association of my life are connected with dear old Dr. True and Gould's Academy, and the girls and boys that congregated there and made life spicy and interesting along in the fifties or thereabouts; but physically, I am not equal to the fatigue and excitement incident to the journey and the occasion, and therefore I am forced to decline with sincere regrets.

The BETHEL NEWS was put into my hands yesterday by a former pupil of the Academy, Mrs. Oliver C. Gould nee Chapman, and a host of memories were awakened as I perused the notice of the Christmas Festival for Dec. 25, 1855. How it came about I do not recall, but I was the "Santa Claus" on that occasion, and I fancy that I was rather a doleful representative of the jolly soul, and I am confirmed in this opinion as I recall the closing paragraph in my little talk to the children, "I have been young and now I am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

The sentiment was all right, though a trifle heavy, and solemn for children, but I do not know as I could make a better selection now. We had a good time, and it was, as far as results are concerned, an immense success.

Of the four students that left the Academy in the summer of 1856 and entered Bowdoin College, the writer alone remains—Harlan Page Brown of Bethel, studious, sincere, and with a purpose in life, fell at Antietam—1862. Philanthropus Cleveland Wiley also of Bethel, whole-souled, vigorous and manly, his heart in his chosen profession, came to an early and sudden death in devotion to his calling. Seth C. Farrington, a prince of good fellows at old Gould's and at college, who gave promise of a brilliant life, has passed from all knowledge of his friends, and is supposed to have died years ago somewhere in the far West.

These three were noble specimens of large and vigorous manhood, seemingly with vitality enough for a century, but they are gone, and others too of that time have joined the "great majority," yet their names sound homelike and familiar after all these years: Sul. Green, John Walker, John Twitchell, Dr. Gordon, Dolly Barker, Adeltha Twitchell, Angle Chapman, Nellie Conner and Mary Barker. Ah, me, a royal company! Sometimes it seems but yesterday that they were speaking, and then again it seems ages ago, and one falls into a retrospective mood, reviewing the intervening years, and finds that he belongs to antiquity. Yielding to the inevitable; I acknowledge that I belong to a past generation, as if, if I may paraphrase Dr. Holmes, "As if I had lived to be The last leaf upon the tree."

The pupils of Gould's Academy are a long line of goodly men and women that have gone out into all the world, and have wrought for knowledge, humanity and righteousness.

I trust that many of the sons and daughters of the Academy will be present to grace the occasion on the 9th. I venture to felicitate the Committee in advance on a highly enjoyable and successful Reunion.

Very Respectfully and Cordially,
ADELBERT B. TWITCHELL.

Windsor, N. C., July 14, 1900.

My dear Miss Frye:—Your invitation to be present at a re-union of "the children of old Gould's" gave me much pleasure. The feeling that I was thus remembered and honored by her students after the lapse of nearly half a century deeply touched me, vividly bringing to my mind many happy memories of my student life at the dear old Academy. The light-hearted, happy students of my day are now the aged grandparents of the present generation, or have passed beyond the boundaries of time, where, with the grand old man who, for so many years guided their thoughts, chided their waywardness, encouraged their virtues, and directed their aspirations, they wait to greet their fellow-students in that glorious, happy re-union for all time.

Amid all the memories of my school life at old Gould's, the grand, central figure around which all others cling, is that of the loved preceptor, the venerable doctor, the wise counsellor, the associate and friend of the youth under his charge. Of all the noted sons of Maine, there is no name in all its bright galaxy that will longer continue to be felt in shaping its destinies than that of Dr. N. T. True of Gould's Academy.

It was my good fortune to board at the home of Mr. Alfred Twitchell, and to have as room-mates Wm. B. Lapham and Cyrus Hamlin, each of whom added an illustrious page to the history of the State, and left a record extending beyond its borders. "Cy" Hamlin, as he was familiarly known, laid his young life on the altar of his country, having won the star of a general. Dr. "Bill" served with distinction during the entire war. He became famous as an editor and historian, an honor to his Alma Mater, his native town and State.

I regret very much that I am not able to be with you on Aug. 9. I assure you it would give me great pleasure to meet my old school-mates, their children and grand-children, to renew old friendships and form new. Every hamlet, mountain and stream in the county of Oxford has a place in my memory, and there is nothing connected with Bethel that is not dear to me.

You will kindly remember me to all my old friends, and say to all connected with Gould's Academy that, as an alumnus, my love and best wishes will ever be for my Alma Mater.

Very cordially yours,
STEPHEN BARTLETT KENNEY.

Garland Chapel's Annual Fair.

Once more the Ladies' Club announces to its friends and to the charming strangers within the city gates that it will hold its annual day and evening Fair and entertainment from one till 10:30 p. m. on Thursday, August 16th.

There will be that fascinating fancy-table with so much upon it that appeals to the feminine mind. The wise woman quietly appropriates from this table in August, if she is of the "fore-handed" type, what she triumphantly brings out in the rush and hurry of Christmas week, for, be it known, appropriate Christmas gifts are a special feature of this Fair.

That sensible, practical apron, bag and holder table! Many a hurried house-wife has blessed its existence! Then those blessed children at their table, who sit in watchful dignity behind the work of those patient little fingers. These philanthropic buds and buds-lets of society: who can resist those appealing eyes?

And the candy table! Bethel's home-made candy has nearly ruined Huyler's business!! You will not wonder when you see temptation spread before you.

The supper, served at 6 p. m., will be just as good as ever, and the same jolly spirits will make good cheer.

At eight o'clock you will prepare to be entertained.

This committee upon entertainment very well knew that unless Mrs. Wm. Rogers Chapman made her appearance, as of yore, before the Fair night audience, the gloom that would settle upon the disappointed community would overwhelm every other would-be entertainer. It's dreadful to admit it, but the fact being faced, this committee prostrated itself at Mrs. Chapman's feet and besought her in mercy to revoke the decision she had made that she could not help this year. The passionate appeal melted her kind heart to the degree of being fairly willing, to read selections from "The Kentucky Ciderella," and to recite "The dolly's funeral." Miss Pringinton and Miss Rand will play a duet, and we shall hear Miss Pringinton's contralto voice. Miss Elsie Weitz will, by special request, recite "Patsy," and will play a duet with Mrs. Gehring.

Mrs. Gehring will read one of Howells' new society farces, and there is a prospect of out-of-town talent being secured for further enjoyment.

Do we sound alluring? We sincerely hope and assure you, one and all, that Garland Chapel on Thursday afternoon and evening will be a merry and interesting place to visit.

A Card of Thanks.

I desire to express my heartfelt thanks and appreciation to all the neighbors and friends of Bethel, Bryant Pond and South Woodstock, who so kindly assisted me and extended to me their tender sympathy during the terrible experience through which I have been called upon to pass, the sudden and sad death of my loving wife. I earnestly hope that in some way you all will be richly rewarded.

REUNION NOTES.

Beautiful flowers were received on Reunion day from Mrs. James W. Stevens (Molly Estes) of Freeport, and were given a prominent place in the evening decorations at Odeon Hall.

It is with regret that the many friends of Mrs. Kate Griffin Seguin of Fordham, N. Y., found that the Gould's Academy invitation failed to reach her. Mrs. Seguin will remain for a short time in Bethel.

The following telegram was received just before the guests were seated at the banquet:

THIN HAIR

Lots of people have thin hair. Perhaps their parents had thin hair; perhaps their children have thin hair. But this does not make it necessary for them to have thin hair.

One thing you may rely upon—

makes the hair healthy and vigorous; makes it grow thick and long. It cures dandruff also.

It always restores color to gray hair,—all the dark, rich color of early life. There is no longer need of your looking old before your time.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"As a remedy for restoring color to the hair I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor has no equal. I have always given it perfect satisfaction in every way."
